“James Rouse and the Ethics of Urban Development”
12:30-1:50 p.m. Learning Commons Town Hall

Lenneal Henderson, Distinguished Professor, School of Public and International Affairs; Senior Research Associate, Schaefer Center for Public Policy & Senior Fellow, Hoffberger Center for Professional Ethics

Mr. Rouse was an anomaly among real-estate developers, a man who sought not just to make profits but to transform the landscape and the quality of civic life. Long before he retired in 1979 as chairman of the Rouse Company, his development concern, to devote full time to his effort to build affordable housing, he had made his mark as a socially conscious developer, determined to rethink the traditional forms of suburban growth and downtown retail organization.

“Drone Warfare: Moral or Mortal?”

11 a.m.-12:20 p.m. Student Center Bogomolny Room

Dr. Faheem Younus, Associate Professor of Infectious Diseases, at the University of Maryland School of Medicine. Dr. Younus is a regular contributor to the Huffington Post. http://www.huffingtonpost.com/faheem-younus/

Drones are the new norm in warfare. Over the past decade, the US drones have attacked militants in Pakistan and Yemen. While drones have successfully removed hundreds of militants, they have also been blamed for the death of over a thousand innocent civilians. Come to this talk if you would like to understand if drones are moral or mortal.

“War on Poverty”

2-3:20 p.m. Student Center Bogomolny Room

Josh Kassner, Associate Professor, Division of Legal, Ethical and Historical Studies & Senior Fellow, Hoffberger Center for Professional Ethics

This program will discuss the 50th Anniversary of the “War on Poverty.” Ignorance is used as an excuse for responsibility for injustice that could be adapted to our general apathy with regards to the plight of those living in poverty.

“Snowden vs. NSA: What Side Are You On?”

“A Career in Ethics”

11 a.m.-12:20 p.m. Learning Commons Town Hall

Virginia Rafalko Canter, Ethics Advisor, International Monetary Fund, Washington, D.C.

Ms. Canter will give an overview of her career in ethics, including at the International Monetary Fund, and before that, with the Federal government. She will also discuss the path she’s taken since being an undergraduate and law student here at UB.

“A Law School’s Efforts to Reduce Truancy: Therapeutic Jurisprudence Applied”

2-3:20 p.m. Learning Commons Town Hall

Barbara A. Babb, Associate Professor of Law, Director, Sayra and Neil Meyerhoff Center for Families, Children and the Courts

The mission of the UofB School of Law Sayra and Neil Meyerhoff Center for Families, Children and the Courts (CFCC) is family justice reform. CFCC’s Truancy Court Program (TCP), created in 2004, is one of the center’s most visible and popular projects. Since the spring of 2005, CFCC has implemented the TCP in several schools each academic year and has served over 2000 Maryland students and their families. One of the legal principles underlying all of CFCC’s work, including the TCP, is therapeutic jurisprudence. This session also details the impact of the TCP on the law students and the Maryland judges involved in the program.
