The President's Message

The new John and Frances Angelos Law Center will transform the University of Baltimore and the city whose name it shares. The facility's purpose, scope and location call for the creation of an iconic, forward-looking building, one that will come to define the University and mid-town Baltimore. We are reaching out to enlist the talent of leading designers and architects to help us realize this vision of our future.

We envision an open, transparent building responsive to light and energy – where one can look in and look out. As an educational institution, we envision a building whose design teaches critical lessons about how to create and sustain healthy urban environments. As a law school dedicated to community involvement, public interest and diversity, we envision a structure that welcomes both our academic community and our urban neighbors. As an institution committed to excellence, we envision a signature building whose materials reflect the quality of our aspirations.

The site of the Angelos Law Center is consistent with a core educational value: innovation. Free of any limiting or defining architectural context, and on a location that will be viewed from all sides, the building's impact cannot be maximized by traditional approaches.

The site also points to a design that can support a core UB value: access. Located at Baltimore's transportation hub, the structure will be accessible both physically and visually. It will greet all those who exit Penn Station, and it will be seen by the thousands of people who travel to downtown Baltimore every day. The statement that the building makes is one that will be heard.
